

The Spirituality Corner

by Toni Brasted, Ph.D., CG-C, RA.

Marriage and Divorce

Among all the challenges we face in life, intimate relationships, apparently is the most difficult of all for us to handle. Many people are dealing with relationship issues and living with doubt, guilt and several others emotions. The main question seems always to be how to sort feelings and make decisions, especially when someone new comes to our life scenario and sweeps us off our feet.

How to know if it is right to surrender? How to deal with other commitments we have previously acquired? How to face society judgment over our actions? Instead to write giving the readers my personal understanding view point on the subject, I decided to reprint what follows from the book "Interview with an Angel" by Stevan Thayer, in which, angel Ariel enlightens us about the spiritual view of marriage and divorce.

What is your view of Marriage and Divorce?

Angel Ariel: We have two answers. Marriage, as you see it, is an afterthought. Marriage, as we see it, is what happens first. It is what happens the moment two people see each other, the moment two souls connect to each other. From our realm, it is something that can be seen with great ease, for the light that shines forth is very bright. Neither soul gains anything. There is no missing piece provided by the other. But there is a power - an energy, like electricity - that one soul ignites within the other which allows that soul to come alive. When true marriage happens (marriage as viewed from this realm), two souls find each other, and with no effort whatsoever, they bring alive within each other that power, that force. You tritely call it love, but it is far more than the word you understand.

These two souls bring alive the possibility of the fulfillment of each soul's destiny through the very process of their meeting.

"There is a power that one soul ignites within the other which allows that soul to come alive".

What you call marriage is more a formalization for those within government, religion or family to proclaim and legalize that which has happened long before any such celebration occurs. It is a most joyous and a most sacred experience, for it is a triumphant celebration that two souls have found each other and, in that finding, unlocked the potential to live the lives they came to live.

Divorce, as you see it, is also an afterthought. It is first seen from this realm. The light that shines forth from the joining of two souls dims. The power that each person has to support the other in the fulfillment of their lives' and souls' destinies ends.

It would not be possible for us to describe fully why and how this happens. It is clearly visible from this realm when it does. Factors that we often see are too much distress, too much interference from the mechanism of personality or ego.

The ego creates more fear, distress and disruption than the energy of the union of two souls can compensate for. The fear blocks out the power that the meeting of two souls can manifest within a life. And without that power, without that spark and that divine flow being active in their lives, the light that shines forth from the united being of these two souls is very dim.

Sometimes the light shines forth for a period of what you call time and then is doused or cut off by the interference of the ego. Other times in the ever-changing, ever-evolving flow of life as you know it, a soul is meant only to join with another for a period of time, so long as that divine spark stays alive. For some, that spark grows more powerful throughout an entire lifetime together, in other cases, after time together has passed and tremendous growth has occurred, there is a natural plateauing or ending, of this power that each has to evolve and grow. As a result, the energy begins to dim. There is a natural ending of the union. Later, as you see it, divorce occurs, but it has already happened well before the legal, religious or societal action that you label divorce takes place.

Within the framework of many of your Christian religions, and in the sentiment of many other religious celebrations of what you call marriage, there is a phrase that expresses the truth but also misses the truth, depending on its interpretation. The phrase commonly used is:

That in this union between man and woman that we call marriage, what God has joined together, let no man put asunder".

When viewed from this realm, it is the highest-level statement of truth. Using the limited vocabulary and models you possess, the statement, "What God has joined together" is a simple way of saying what we have tried to describe as the union of two souls and the light that shines forth from those souls. It is not appropriate for anyone to try to interfere with that union, for the spiritual magnitude of what has happened is not of the realm of man.

However, that phrase is often used to try to keep together for human purposes that which, from this realm, is clearly seen as God no longer joining two souls together.

For as that spark, that light, of the two souls dims, it is clear that God no longer joins them together. So, while this phrase uttered in many a union celebration is accurate and true, it is often interpreted to mean that once the human celebration of marriage has taken place it can never be undone. And, from this realm, that is not true."

Ariel's wisdom, once again, remind us to be open to opportunities, to understand that nothing happens by chance, that people that unexpectedly comes to our lives or leave our lives, is for a reason.

I do believe that before we born, as a soul, we seat with our masters and guardians and we design the life we will come here to live and all the experiences we decided to live in order to grow spiritually. Of course, our life experience only can be accomplished by our interaction with other people in form of sacred contracts that we agreed to fulfill.

Or job than is to accept people in our life and allow them to live their experiences as we live ours. How do we know what to do and when? Once again, we aim to find the answer when we know that the answer is within. We might tell others, I am on this or that situation and I do not know what to do, but the truth is: We know; our heart always speaks louder. We know with do doubt what our heart and soul is longing for.

What makes us apparently confused is our fear of the consequence of our actions. We want changes, but we also want the guarantee that it will be good! Well, when we talk about life experience, there is no guarantee that the experience will be good at our narrow point of view of this lifetime, but every person who cross our path, certainly is in a mission, and the mission is always to take us to the next level of our growth.

NOTE: Interested to have more guidance from Angel Ariel? Consider buying the book "Interview with an "ANGEL" by Stevan J. Thayer, the creator of Integrated Energy Therapy – Healing with the energy of the angels

To learn more about spiritual healing please visit my website:

<https://doctorsofthesoul.net>